

Fossils Should Be Eroded Away in Deep Time

Fossils are abundant in many locations in North America, including mountains where erosion rates are high. Widespread persistence of fossil layers suggests the layers have not had time to be eroded away because they are not as old as claimed.

Abundant dinosaur tracks at Dinosaur Ridge, Colorado, USA

Present average rates of erosion are too high for preservation of Lower Cretaceous rocks like these.

Image: Footwarrior, CC BY-SA 3.0