

Turbidites

Turbidites are under-water deposits that formed rapidly. They are typically associated with large-scale flooding or tectonic activity. They comprise a major portion of the rock record, and show that catastrophic geologic processes have been important in producing the geologic column.

Turbidites near Broto, Spain

Image: GRI